

Contents

Acknowledgements	V
Contents	VI
Abbreviations	XI
1 Introduction.....	1
1.1 Research objective.....	2
1.2 Basic challenges: how to explore civilian power?	6
1.2.1 The lack of a consistent theory of power	6
1.2.2 The lack of a consistent method of measuring power	7
1.3 Confronting the challenges	11
1.3.1 Confronting the lack of a definition of power	11
1.3.2 Confronting the lack of a power measurement.....	12
1.4 The limits of the study: a building-block approach.....	13
2 Methods.....	16
2.1 Case study design: a structured focused comparison as a tool for analyzing civilian power	16
2.2 Choosing the cases	22
2.2.1 The cases: scope and domain.....	23
2.2.2 Taking power as a relation into the account of the comparison	31
2.3 Comparing the cases: within-case analysis.....	33
2.4 Typological theorizing as a means to set up a differentiation of civilian power	37
2.5 Integrating typology/differentiation building and within-case analysis in power research	40
2.6 Data requirements.....	45
2.6.1 EMP/ENP documents and Barcelona+10	47
2.6.2 Expert interviews.....	51
3 The state of power research	56
3.1 The main understandings of power	56
3.1.1 Power as a potential.....	57
3.1.2 Power as influence.....	59
3.1.3 Power as a resource	62
3.1.4 Power as authority, or rule	65

3.1.5	Recent understandings of power	68
3.1.6	Consequences for the research	72
3.2	The state of research concerning the European Union as a civilian power.....	74
3.2.1	The development of the concept of a civilian power	74
3.2.2	The EU as a typical civilian power	79
3.2.3	Characteristics of the EU's civilian policy	81
3.2.4	Why does the EU pursue its civilian policy?.....	85
3.3	Differentiating between the European Union as a civilian power actor and the power it exercises	92
4	Two basic dimensions of power	96
4.1	Power as an attribute versus power as a constitution.....	97
4.2	Direct versus diffuse exercise of power.....	98
5	A fourfold conceptualization of power	100
5.1	Compulsory power	100
5.1.1	Bases of power.....	103
5.1.2	Means, scope, and amount of power	106
5.1.3	The intentionality of power.....	107
5.2	Institutional power.....	110
5.2.1	Institutional power that is exercised by institutions	115
5.2.2	Institutional power that works through institutions.....	119
5.3	Structural power	122
5.3.1	A third face of power	122
5.3.2	Structural power in international relations.....	130
5.4	Productive power.....	132
5.4.1	Producing the agents	132
5.4.2	Productive power in international relations.....	137
6	Setting up the case study	139
6.1	Hypotheses for compulsory power.....	140
6.2	Hypotheses for institutional power	143
6.3	Hypotheses for structural power.....	144
6.4	Hypotheses for productive power.....	146
7	Exploring civilian power: a case study	150
7.1	The development of Euro-Mediterranean relations	150

7.2	The Euro-Mediterranean Partnership	151
7.2.1	How the Euro-Mediterranean Partnership is set up.....	152
7.2.2	How the Euro-Mediterranean Partnership works	155
7.3	The European Neighbourhood Policy	157
7.3.1	Objectives of the ENP	161
7.3.2.....	Values, conditionality and incentives emphasized in the ENP	162
7.3.3	Country Reports and Action Plans	163
7.3.4	Country Strategy Papers and Progress Reports	172
7.4	The examined project in Israel: the EU Partnership for Peace Programme	179
7.4.1	The objective of the Partnership for Peace Programme....	181
7.4.2	Types of promoted civil society groups	184
7.4.3	Promoted projects	188
7.4.4	Financing.....	191
7.4.5	Evaluation of the People to People Programme	193
7.4.6	Recommendations to improve the People to People Programme	202
7.5	The examined project in Egypt: democratization, human rights and civil society under the EC-Egypt Cooperation Programme	204
7.5.1	The objective of the Democratisation, Human Rights and Civil Society Programme.....	206
7.5.2	Types of promoted projects and groups	207
7.5.3	Financing.....	209
8	Analysis of Europe's respective relationships with Israel and Egypt through the focus of compulsory power	211
8.1	Evaluation of the analyzed policies regarding compulsory power	211
8.1.1	Conditionality	211
8.1.2	Sanctions	216
8.1.3	Incentives	218
8.2	Tracing the exercise of compulsory power back to the political context	220

8.2.1 Conditionality	220
8.2.2 Sanctions and Incentives	223
8.3 Conclusion about the exercise of compulsory power	226
9 Analysis of Europe's respective relationships with Israel and Egypt through the focus of institutional power	229
9.1 Evaluation of the analyzed policies regarding institutional power	229
9.1.1 Bias in the institutional setting	229
9.1.2 Agenda setting via the promotion or suppression of topics	231
9.1.3 Agenda setting via the reconceptualization of topics ..	234
9.2 Tracing the exercise of institutional power back to the political context	238
9.2.1 Bias in the institutional setting	238
9.2.2 Agenda setting via the promotion or suppression of topics	239
9.2.3 Agenda setting via the reconceptualization of topics ..	242
9.3 Conclusion about the exercise of institutional power	245
10 Analysis of Europe's respective relationships with Israel and Egypt through the focus of structural power	247
10.1 Evaluation of the analyzed policies regarding structural power	247
10.1.1 Structuring via the political setup	247
10.1.2 Structuring via verbal classifications	252
10.1.3 Structuring via values	254
10.2 Tracing the exercise of structural power back to the political context	257
10.2.1 Structuring via the political setup	257
10.2.2 Structuring via verbal classifications and via values	259
10.3 Conclusion about the exercise of structural power	263
11 Analysis of Europe's respective relationships with Israel and Egypt through the focus of productive power	266
11.1 Evaluation of the analyzed policies regarding productive

power	266
11.1.1 Addressing the actors' identities on the governing level	266
11.1.2 Addressing the actors' identities as a society or a community	270
11.1.3 Addressing the actors' identities as individuals in the Euro-Mediterranean region	274
11.2 Tracing the exercise of productive power back to the political context	276
11.2.1 Addressing the actors' identities on the governing level and as a society or a community	276
11.2.2 Addressing the actors' identities as individuals in the Euro-Mediterranean region	280
11.3 Conclusion about the exercise of productive power	285
12 Readdressing the initial questions: differences between the cases	287
13 Conclusion	292
Bibliography	295